

IDEA #2

Lego-Like Furniture

I've always thought that all my friends have too much stuff. It's mostly because they are American's and American's live in excess. It's in our nature to. So the idea is that the furniture is a cross between camping gear, and IKEA.

You can pack it up and fold it up and move it around from apartment to apartment or dorm to dorm, with ease, and by yourself. No need to get your friend with his dad's pickup truck to help pack up the stuff.

The furniture would be easy to assemble, click together like Lego's, yet tough enough to withstand even the heaviest "random drunk guy at the party who no one seems to know but somehow showed up with the friend that you really hate but invited anyways because they are friends with the person that you don't hate so much but don't really like but know this girl that you have the hots for who works with his sister at the pet store" passing out on it.

It would appear the same as normal permanent furniture looks and feels. It just allows you to move it around without hiring the freshman players of the football team in exchange from 28 foot long meatball subs.