

IDEA #3

GPS unit with "avoid ghetto" option

How many freaking times do GPS units take people through places that someone with a GPS unit should NOT be going. DO NOT turn left there.

Let's be honest GPS units, and cars aren't cheap. If you have enough money to buy a GPS unit for your car, then you most likely don't want to be taken down a street that would make you cry mommy if, god forbid, you have to stop at any of the lights along the boarded up window/locked down/barbed wired/jail caged/ houses and storefronts along this "turn right in 200 ft" street.

No door locking required with this option. This will automatically download the latest housing prices from zillow.com to your GPS unit. It will then determine your route by taking you places where the houses aren't cheaper than a pair of chucks. Which in recent years have actually appreciated in value much faster than some real estate markets, looks like gluing colorful chucks to my walls instead of painting them has paid off. Perhaps in the future people will pay for things in US Converse's, instead of US dollars.